Joseph Reynolds of RT Specialty to Discuss Contractor Faulty Workmanship Coverage Innovations at IRMI Construction Risk Virtual Conference

Hamilton, New Jersey (September 16, 2020) – Joseph Reynolds, assistant vice president within R-T Specialty, LLC’s Environmental and Construction Professional (RT ECP) Practice, will address “Insurance for Faulty Workmanship: The Next Great Innovation for Contractors?” at the IRMI Construction Risk Conference to be held online October 19 – 20.

“The coverage for an insured’s ‘self-performed work’ doesn’t usually exist within today’s General Liability policies,” says Reynolds. “In addition, many of today’s Contractor’s Professional Liability policies do not address the repair or replacement of faulty work or material costs.”

“True Faulty Workmanship coverage forms are often written as separate insuring agreements to specifically cover the claims arising out of the workmanship of “your work” or the use of defective materials or products used in “your work.” This session will provide contractors with an in-depth analysis of the latest advances in this marketplace and the options now available for insuring against the ‘self-performed work’ claims of property owners and other third parties.”

Scheduled for Monday, October 19 at 2:05 p.m. CST, the session will examine the scope of this increasingly popular coverage as well as the drivers behind its adoption by individual contractors and construction firms nationwide. This includes a thorough review of the:

- Faulty Workmanship terms, conditions and exclusions
- Differences in coverages offered by individual carriers
- Real-world incidents that can offer audience members a better grasp of "your work" coverage forms and benefits
